3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

SCOTUS OVERTURNS GAY PARENTAL RIGHTS RULING

1 The Supreme Court on Monday overturned an Alabama judicial ruling that had refused to recognize a gay woman's parental rights over three children she adopted with her lesbian partner and raised from birth. The court took the relatively unusual step of reversing the Alabama Supreme Court without hearing oral arguments in the case. Cases are decided in that fashion when a lower court ruling is considered to be particularly counter to Supreme Court precedents. None of the eight justices dissented. The adoptive mother, identified in court papers as V.L., said she was overjoyed with the ruling. "When the Alabama court said my adoption was invalid and I wasn't their mother, I didn't think I could go on. The Supreme Court has done what's right for my family," she said in a statement. The court said in an unsigned opinion the Alabama court was required to recognize the woman's parental rights because they had been legally endorsed by a court in Georgia. REUTERS

TWITTER PRAISED FOR CRACKING DOWN ON ISIS

2 Officials with the nonprofit Simon Wiesenthal Center praised Twitter Inc. on Monday for increasing efforts to thwart the Islamic State's use of its platform for recruitment and propaganda. The center's Digital Terrorism and Hate Project gave Twitter a grade of "B" in a report card of social networking companies' efforts to fight online activity by militant groups such as ISIS. "We think they are definitely heading in the right direction," the project's director, Rabbi Abraham Cooper, told Reuters ahead of Monday's release of the report card at a press conference in New York. He said the review was based on steps that Twitter has already taken and information that center staff learned in face-to-face meetings with company representatives. REUTERS

US AIRSTRIKE KILLS 150 TERRORISTS

3 The United States has carried out an airstrike in Somalia, killing more than 150 fighters with the al Qaeda-linked Islamist group al Shabaab, following U.S. intelligence on preparations for a large-scale militant attack, the Pentagon said Monday. The weekend strike using both manned and unmanned drone aircraft targeted al Shabaab's "Raso" training camp, a facility about 120 miles north of the capital Mogadishu, the Pentagon said. The U.S. military said it had been monitoring the camp for several weeks before the strike and had gathered intelligence, including knowledge about an imminent threat posed by the trainees. "We know they were going to be departing the camp and that they posed an imminent threat to U.S. and to Amisom, African Union mission in Somalia forces, that are in Somalia," said Pentagon spokesman Cpt. Jeff Davis. Davis declined to disclose any specific information the United States might have about the group's intended target. REUTERS

Students march in

BPS protesters leave class, march to Beacon Hill to protest budget cuts.

Hundreds of Boston students walked out of school Monday and marched to Beacon Hill to protest millions in budget cuts.

Flocks of students numbering more than a thousand boarded buses and trains, hoisted signs in the street and posed on the steps of the Massachusetts State House, beginning a densely packed rally at the bandstand in Boston Common around noon.

Students themselves planned the protest, which came after announcements that the budget for Boston Public Schools would see tens of millions of dollars in cuts next year to close a projected $50 million budget gap — $20 million slashed from the BPS central office and $10 million to $12 million from the schools themselves, according to The Boston Globe.

The demonstrators also oppose lifting the cap on the number of charter schools for the state.

"Education shouldn't be something that's just an option when you want to cut budgets. Education is the success of tomorrow," said Faridat Dangbe, 16, a junior at Brighton Snowden International High School sophomore Jaielyn Lopen said students were initially encouraged to write letters as a form of protest.

"But we've seen that nothing was happening if we wrote letters," she said. "So we decided to take a stand as students and come together to get our voices to be heard."

Marchers later brought their message to Faneuil Hall, where Mayor Marty Walsh and Gov. Charlie Baker were meeting for an unrelated news conference.

Protestors chanted, "SOS! Save our schools," as the politicians walked to their cars. Walsh waved and shook a few demonstrators' hands.

MBTA votes

As protesters chanted in the hearing room, the MBTA's board voted Monday to approve an increase in the cost of fares by an average of 9.22 percent systemwide.

The decision comes after months of meetings and hearings, all of which had brought out opponents to a fare hike who voiced concerns about paying more for a system

budget protest

"I commend them for their advocacy," Walsh told the State House News Service, referring to protestors. He added that he did, however, wish they had stayed in school for the day. "We still have a ways to go. We've made a large increase in the school budget this year, and we're going to continue to work to close that divide."

Boston plans to appropriate $1.27 billion for schools in fiscal year 2017, which is up $13.5 million over this year, according to the News Service. State aid, meanwhile, is set to inch up just 0.6 percent to $213.9 million.

The demonstrations went on largely without incident, with the exception of police action on Boston Common early Monday afternoon.

A police officer told a Metro reporter there had been a fight. BPD spokeswoman Rachel McGuire could not confirm whether there had been an arrest.

Police anticipated the possibility of large crowds following word about the planned walkout, McGuire said.

"It was a huge number of kids and we always have resources on hand," she said. "We did plan for adequate resources."

There were also reports of mid-afternoon tension between youth and police in Downtown Crossing.

Students and their parents have been told by BPS Superintendent Tommy Chang that those who walked out of class would be marked absent.

to raise fares an average 9.3%

with still-unreliable service and opposition to burdening the city's most vulnerable.

Monday's meeting was no different, as demonstrators waving signs and shouting in megaphones loudly pressured board members not to bump up costs to riders.

The protestors shouted over the meeting in progress, yelling, "Fight the hike!" "This board is corrupt!" and "We won't be ignored!" according to accounts from media in the room.

In that testy environment, the board voted to adopt an increase at the higher end of options the board considered for hiking fare prices.

According to the new fare structure, price increases vary from service to service. The specifics of the plan were not immediately clear.

Earlier, the board had said it was deciding between two options: a system-wide increase of about 6.7 percent or about 9.7 percent. There had also been discussions about carving out discounts for some students, low-income riders and seniors. SPENCER BUELL

Hub to host Forbes Under 30 Summit

The main event will be held at Faneuil Hall, and other events will be held on university campuses in October.

Home to the highest proportion of young adults of any major city in America, Boston will this fall host the annual Forbes Under 30 Summit, a series of five connected events meant to bring together young talent from around the world.

Running Oct. 16 to 19, the Forbes Under 30 Summit will include a music festival, a food festival, a day of community service and an invite-only main event featuring a panel discussion and lectures for "1,000 of America's leading young entrepreneurs and game changers, culled from Forbes' 30 Under 30 lists," according to Forbes Media.

"Our innovative economy and cutting edge resources continue to build a strong environment for economic growth and job creation — creating an ideal environment for young talent and future entrepreneurial successes from a dynamic generation," Gov. Charlie Baker said in a statement.

The main event will be held at Faneuil Hall, and other events will be held on university campuses and will be open to "top young entrepreneurs from around the world" for a fee. An "Under 30 Village" will be established at Boston City Hall Plaza for participants to gather, meet and network.

"Boston is known for having the best and brightest talent, with over one-third of our population being young professionals," Boston Mayor Marty Walsh said in a statement. "As we prepare to host this summit, we look forward to continuing to engage young leaders in our efforts to move the city forward for everyone."

Baker and Walsh joined Forbes Media chief operating officer Mike Federle, Forbes editor Randall Lane and General Catalyst Partners managing director David Fialkow at Faneuil Hall on Monday afternoon to announce the summit. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Survivor of bombing dies in crash

Two Northeastern University students, including a Boston Marathon bombing survivor, died in a car accident while traveling overseas, reports said.

Victoria McGrath, the bombing survivor, was killed along with Priscilla Perez Torres in the crash in an undisclosed country overseas, NECN reported.

"Northeastern University has confirmed that two undergraduate students have been tragically killed in a car accident overseas," Northeastern wrote in a statement. "Our hearts go out to the family and friends of Victoria McGrath and Priscilla Perez Torres in this extremely difficult time."

Victoria McGrath, who was 20 years old at the time, was reportedly injured during the Boston Marathon bombing and suffered nerve damage that required physical therapy.

"I was literally 5 feet away from where the first bomb went off," McGrath told the "Today" show in an interview. "I don't know how you can put a bomb there and look at the people around and know that you're going to kill them. I don't understand it."

Boston firefighter James Plourde carried McGrath to a medical tent after the blasts. The image was one of many circulated in the media after the attack. Plourde released a statement Monday saying, "It's been said that I helped to save her life, but the truth is Victoria saved my life after the marathon as her love, support and friendship helped myself and my family deal with the acts of 4/15/13. Our thoughts and prayers to out to the McGrath and Perez Torres families as they deal with this unimaginable tragedy. #BostonStrong."

Casting call for Wahlberg's bombing movie

Filmmakers are holding an open casting call this Sunday for extras for the film "Patriots Day," a movie about the Boston Marathon bombings which will be directed by actor and Dorchester native Mark Wahlberg.

"Boston Casting is looking for general extras, police officers, firefighters, doctors, nurses, paramedics, SWAT team members, and marathon runners," Boston.com reported. Some of the perks, Boston.com noted, include a hot lunch and hanging out with Wahlberg all day.

"Patriots Day" has faced some road bumps on its way to production. Just recently the film was denied permission to film on the campus where convicted Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev attended school.

"Gerry Kavanaugh, the acting chancellor of the University of Massachusetts in Dartmouth, said in a statement that the school would turn down the request from CBS Films because a movie shoot would be 'too disruptive to our campus community,'" Reuters reported. "Patriots Day" has a planned release of Dec. 21. MATTHEW LEE

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

Clinton, Sanders say they can beat Trump during feisty debate

The two contenders cut each other off on several occasions, in a race that has been much more polite than the Republican presidential campaign.

Democratic presidential contenders Bernie Sanders and Hillary Clinton sparred in a debate Sunday over who had the best chance to beat Republican front-runner Donald Trump, and mocked the level of discourse in the Republican White House race.

Near the end of a Michigan debate that featured sharp clashes over trade and the auto-industry bailout, as well as a lengthy discussion of religion. Clinton and Sanders both said they could not wait to face the brash billionaire in the Nov. 8 election to succeed Democratic President Barack Obama.

"Donald Trump's bigotry, his bullying, his bluster, are not going to wear well on the American people," Clinton said. "We have to end the divisiveness, we have to unify the country."

Sanders said he would "love" to run against Trump and noted many opinion polls showed him faring better against him than Clinton did. He and Clinton urged voters to compare the substance of their debate with the Republican versions, which last week featured name-calling and Trump defending his penis size.

"We are, if elected president, going to invest a lot of money in mental health," Sanders said, then cracked a joke. "And when you watch these Republican debates, you know why we need to invest in mental health."

Trump frequently says he will beat either Clinton or Sanders. "I am the one person that she does not want to run against," he said of Clinton on Saturday.

The debate in Flint, which is suffering a water contamination and public health crisis, came as Sanders has struggled to slow Clinton's march to the presidential nomination. Sanders picked up some good news on Sunday with a win in Maine's caucus. REUTERS

Mexican president says won't pay for Trump wall, makes Hitler warning

Mexico's president has said his country will not pay for White House hopeful Donald Trump's proposed wall along the U.S.-Mexico border, and likened his "strident tone" to the ascent of dictators like Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini.

President Enrique Peña Nieto's comments, published in Monday's Excelsior newspaper, were among the most critical public comments yet by a foreign leader of the New York billionaire.

Trump, front-runner in the race for the Republican Party presidential nomination for the Nov. 8 election, has sparked outrage in Mexico because of his campaign vow to build a wall along the southern U.S. border to keep out illegal immigrants and drugs, and to make Mexico pay for it. REUTERS

Remember last week when Kanye West posted a photo of a computer screen that seemed to suggest he was frequenting the file-sharing site Pirate Bay? Yeah, about that.

On his way to a flight out of LAX, West decided to stop and chat with some of TMZ's finest to clear things up: "It's obviously not my computer," he said. Obviously, right? West doesn't need to pirate things online, since — as he's clarified — he's plenty rich. It's just his business that's $53 million in debt.

Anyway: "I took a picture of it in the studio, and then everybody was like, 'Don't put that up.' I was like, 'Let it go up,'" he explained. Which honestly is just further proof that West is possibly the human being most susceptible to reverse psychology, if you're looking to get him to do something.

Taylor Swift and Calvin Harris share perfectly imperfect anniversary pics

Taylor Swift and Calvin Harris continue to use social media as proof that they're living their best life. What is Swift artfully filtering now, you ask? Oh, just their first anniversary. Swift shared a close-up of a vintage gold heart-shaped locket with the special day engraved in it. Then Harris took to Snapchat to share a video of him and Swift ogling a cake hand-iced with "1 year" in artfully amateurish writing, with two lopsided hearts on top. He then posted a photo of Sylvester Stallone giving a thumbs-up in front of a rainbow, with the caption "current mood." So that should give a pretty clear picture of how they're feeling. (Right?) Also, turns out Stallone has really weird thumbs. Who knew?

Carmen Electra gets a match made on reality TV

Carmen Electra is nothing if not open-minded. While doing a radio interview in Australia, she was informed about former cricket player and current "I'm a Celebrity, Get Me Out of Here" contestant Shane Warne, who recently expressed interest in dating Electra during an episode of the reality show. "I follow her on Insta and every day I go, 'Oh God, that's it, she's the one,'" Warne told fellow contestant Havana Brown, who is buddies with Electra. "She might be a fruitcake but I don't know, she might be good fun, too." (Heck, Electra could put that on her resume.)

Anyway, the former "Baywatch" star told radio hosts Kyle and Jackie O. that she's "very flattered" by Warne's comments. "I didn't know he dated [Elizabeth] Hurley, but I know he's an extremely attractive athlete, very famous in Australia," she said. So the radio hosts did what any decent people would do: They got a satellite phone out to Warne in the jungle and relayed some text-message flirting between the two, and now Electra and Warne have plans to meet up once he's back in civilization.

Jada Pinkett Smith brushes off Chris Rock's Oscars dig

It took more than a week, but someone finally got Jada Pinkett Smith to respond to Chris Rock's joke at her expense in his Oscars monologue.

During the telecast, Rock had quipped that Smith's boycott of the Academy Awards was ridiculous: "Jada boycotting the Oscars is like me boycotting Rihanna's panties. I wasn't invited," he joked.

So what does she think about the comment? Judging by her reaction when questioned by a photographer about it, she's focusing on forward momentum. "It comes with the territory, sweetheart," she tells X17. "Hey, look, it comes with the territory, but we gotta keep it moving. We gotta keep it moving. There's a lot of stuff we gotta handle, a lot of stuff in our world right now. We gotta keep it moving." Is "we gotta keep it moving" the new "water under the bridge"?

Jeremy Sisto gets morbid

The onetime "Six Feet Under" actor gets even darker with "The Other Side of the Door."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Jeremy Sisto can tell you "The Other Side of the Door" isn't just about scares. "I was kind of expecting a normal horror thing — that we would be running from evil people," the actor tells us. "This one's a little more complicated."

In fact, it sounds like a drama. Sisto plays an American in Mumbai, India, whose young son accidentally drowns in a car accident. His wife (Sarah Wayne Callies, of "The Walking Dead") was the one driving and couldn't save him. Overwrought with grief, she discovers she can say goodbye to him via an old Indian ritual. In the process, she accidentally unleashes his spirit into the world, along with others, wreaking havoc.

More than most horror stories, it's about something real: grief and the sometimes dangerous limits of parental love. (Its premise is even reminiscent of 1974's "Deathdream," in which a mother won't let her husband destroy their son, who's come back from the dead

a ravenous zombie.)

"That's the great thing about horror: You can combine it with other genres. You can deal with any theme you want to," Sisto says. "And then you have this tool to make sure the audience is gripped to their seat and engaged."

Indeed, he admits it was sometimes too heavy for him. "There are some things you don't want to imagine too much,"

he says. "It's impossible to even imagine what it's like to lose a child. There were certain takes when it felt like my brain wouldn't let me imagine the circumstances anymore."

Sisto is no stranger to the morbid. He spent years on "Six Feet Under," playing Billy Chenoweth, the unstable brother of Rachel Griffiths' Brenda. Still, he doesn't tend to watch horror as much as he used to.

"My wife doesn't like them," he says. But he's drawn towards ones that tend to be brainier. "I'm a fan of dramas. I'm naturally drawn to things that deal with human emotions in a way that I can relate to."

Does he tend to be morbid himself, given his track record? "I definitely think all life is about death," he replies. "Any moment we live, there's some kind of reflection about the one thing we all share: We're all going to die and we don't know what that means. I think most great art comes from that meditation."

Clean beauty

Gwyneth Paltrow launches a luxe, natural skincare line.

TINA CHADHA
@TinaatMetro
tina.chadha@metro.us

Forget the health-food store eye cream and put down that beeswax balm — organic beauty products just got luxe. But who's going to spend $100 on an all-natural moisturizer? "Vain people like me that want products that actually work," says Gwyneth Paltrow, with a laugh.

The Academy Award-winning actress and healthy lifestyle maven, who got into clean living after her father was diagnosed with cancer, just released a high-performance skin care line. "I wasn't finding that efficacy in products at the health food store," she explains. "I thought there must be a way to create incredible beautiful products that are not toxic."

In partnership with Juice Beauty and named after Paltrow's successful lifestyle brand, Goop's collection of six age-defying skin care products are made with certified organic ingredients.

We chatted with Paltrow about her faves in the line, her efforts in getting a clean beauty bill passed and the cringe-worthy products her daughter brings home. (Yes, even Apple can't resist some bargain eye shadow.)

What did you learn about skin care during this process?

The main thing that I learned is how shocking it is that the products I've been using my whole life are full of chemicals and carcinogens and plastics. You have this idea of clean, nontoxic beauty, but when I really start to look at what's allowed in our products, it galvanized me.

What product made you go, "Wow — we're on to something here?"

The Instant Facial. I think you're only supposed to use it two or three times a week. But I use it every night because I'm old and I need the regeneration [laughs]. It brings fresh skin to the surface and you feel really clean and plump.

Goop founder Gwyneth Paltrow wants to save your skin.

What are your three best tips for glowing, beautiful skin?

Aside from good products: hydration, nutrition and exercise. I think without good nutrition it's very hard to have good skin. Skin tells all your secrets. I think exercise, as well. Circulation, perspiration, detoxing the skin, which is the largest organ in the body.

You've been a champion of natural beauty for so long. Any changes you'd like to see in the industry?

I would like there to be sweeping legislation reform around it. It's one of those instances of big business really exploiting the customer for their bottom line and it's really putting everyone at risk. The more you know about it, the worse you feel about it. I have a daughter and she's obsessed with makeup products.

She loves those Pink body mists from Victoria's Secret, and I wish they regulated what was in it because you're talking about prepubescent, pubescent and postpubescent girls who are fascinated by all this stuff, and it's full of things that are disrupting their hormones and are really toxic. The consumer now is starting to become more aware. It's a consumer-driven movement. I recently signed on with [California Senator] Dianne Feinstein. She's introducing a clean beauty bill, so I'm going to support her in that.

What are you teaching your daughter, Apple, about beauty?

It's tricky. I talk to her a lot about what's contained in a product. Sometimes it makes an impact on her; sometimes it doesn't. She recently she ordered a 180 eye shadow palette from China that was literally, like, $1.89 and I was like, "I don't know what to say about this, I can't imagine what's in it." But I want her to feel her own autonomy, so it's a balance. I've never been that mother that doesn't have the Goldfish and Oreos in the house, because then I know when they have freedom that's all they will eat. It's hard. I really wish it was more regulated so I wouldn't have to worry about it to the extent that I do.

MAKE HEALTHY YOUR NEW HAPPY

Why insurance should cover meditation

As stress continues to be linked to a myriad of health problems — and costs — insurance companies should start to look into preventive measures.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@meiro.us

Anyone who has ever gotten a medical bill in the mail knows how expensive medical care is — both for the patient and the insurance carrier. Consider the cost for a quadruple bypass surgery: $62,500 on average, according to the American Heart Association, a number that does not include the cost of home care, medicine or follow-up appointments. Preventive care is the key to saving money — particularly when it comes to ailments caused by stress.

An epidemic of toxic stress

"Stress has been called the black plague of the 21st century," says Bob Roth, executive director of the David Lynch Foundation, which teaches Transcendental Meditation, a form of reflective meditation (focusing on a question, theme or mantra). According to PsychCentral, stress is linked to the six leading causes of death including heart disease, cancer, lung ailments, accidents, cirrhosis of the liver and suicide — and 43 percent of adults have health problems because of stress.

Pricy for everyone

Stress also leads to pricey health problems, something Rebecca Palm sees regularly as the co-founder of CoPatient, a service that helps consumers tackle expensive medical bills. "Health insurance costs are rising across the board, and everyone — including insurance carriers — are feeling the effects of that," she says. "On the patient side, stress can be a factor in a lot of different conditions that would make someone see a doctor. According to Forbes, workplace stress alone is responsible for up to $190 billion in annual U.S. health care costs."

With statistics like that, it's no surprise many people are taking efforts to manage their stress in tangible ways, such as through yoga, exercise or different types of meditation such as mindfulness meditation (focusing on your breath), reflective meditation or concentration meditation (with the aim of emptying the mind).

And insurance companies are doing their research, too. "Preventative care is one way of lowering health care costs by treating patients before any problems become much larger and more costly down the line," Palm says. "Providing stress-reducing benefits, whether it is covering yoga and other preventative care measures, are just a few examples of some of the innovative ways that the industry is reacting to people's needs."

Evidence matters

But don't expect to be able to cash in on anything vaguely labeled as meditative. "Saying 'meditation' on its own doesn't mean anything," Roth says. "There has to be a systematic way of teaching it and evidence that it works." One way this is done, Roth says, is by studying the levels of cortisol — the stress hormone — in the body.

What about yoga and gym memberships?

Considering the myriad of studies linking exercise to lowering stress levels, is it optimistic to think that insurance will soon cover gym memberships next? Some already do. Many insurance companies have a fitness reimbursement program, covering some or all gym memberships up to a capped price, as long as you can prove you go regularly.

B's look strong for stretch run

The Bruins have a month left to prove they're a legit contender in the East.

RICH SLATE
@RichSlate
sports@metro.us

Barring an unlikely late-season collapse by either of the current wild card leaders (Pittsburgh and Detroit), the eight teams that will be in the Eastern Conference playoffs in just over a month seem pretty settled: Washington, the Rangers and the Islanders from the Metropolitan Division then Tampa Bay, Florida and Boston from the Atlantic Division.

Still, there is plenty of intrigue left in the Bruins' (36-23-7) final 15 games since theoretically they could finish anywhere from second in the conference to eighth (ninth-place Philadelphia is eight points behind them — although they do have two games in hand). Obviously, that makes a huge difference with the Capitals (48-13-4) and Lightning (39-22-

4) being the two clubs that the B's most want to avoid for as long as possible in the playoffs.

The B's are 6-3-1 in their last 10 games and they are coming off a 2-1-1 week-long homestand that was bookended by a humbling 4-1 loss to Tampa Bay on Feb. 28 and ended with a 2-1 overtime defeat to Washington on Saturday. In between, the Bruins had an uninspiring 2-1 win over Calgary on Tuesday and a 4-2 victory against the Blackhawks on Thursday that was undoubtedly their finest performance of this strange season.

Overall, head coach Claude Julien (who has tied Art Ross' Bruins franchise record of 387 regular-season wins) was happy with the way that his team had played against the two best teams in the NHL in back-to-back games.

"They followed the game plans against the different teams and made small adjustments," Julien said. "We showed that we are capable of playing our game against them."

Indeed, it was a good sign that they earned three out of a possible four points against the Blackhawks and Capitals, especially at TD Garden, where they have yet to even reach the .500 mark (15-16-4) in 2015-16. Boston will be on the second night of a back-to-back Tuesday at the Lightning (7:30, NESN).

Keep in mind that the Bruins are still one of the league's best road teams (20-9-4). The Lightning are playing great (9-1-0 in their last 10 games) and have taken over first-place, while the Panthers (4-4-2) are falling apart after over-achieving for most of the season. Tampa Bay is two points ahead of Florida and three points in front of Boston (which has played one more game than both of those teams).

Goaltender Tuukka Rask (28 saves) picked up a loss against Washington, but he has seen plenty of positives in his club's recent outings.

"Our game has tightened up [defensively]; we're playing good hockey," Rask said. "You can't always score four or five goals every night."

The Bruins return to the Garden on Thursday (7 p.m., NESN) to host the Hurricanes (29-26-

11) and they'll take on the Islanders (36-20-7) in Boston for a rare Saturday matinee (1 p.m., NESN).

'I'll even miss Pats fans'

Peyton Manning officially called it a career Monday and he said in his retirement speech that he'll "even miss the Patriots fans in Foxboro." Manning added: "And they should miss me, because they sure did get a lot of wins off of me." GETTY IMAGES

metro.us/horoscopes

Aries High energy, charisma and pizzazz, coupled with know-how, insight and the fortitude to get things up and running will draw attention. Make romance a priority.

Taurus Ask and you shall receive. Let your curiosity lead the way, and share your thoughts. Love is in the stars, and showing your emotions openly will entice someone special.

Gemini Spend more time reaching your goals instead of helping someone else get ahead. Don't aim for popularity when you should aim for victory.

Cancer Emotional sensitivity will put you in a unique position. You will be able to sense what others want or are thinking, allowing you to manipulate whatever situation you face.

Leo Focus inward and do your best to explore and expand interests that will help you get ahead personally or professionally. Invest in one of your ideas and watch it blossom.

Virgo You'll get an opportunity to present something you've longed to do. Preparation is everything along with presentation. Celebrate your success with someone you love.

Libra Indecisiveness will not help you win favors or coax people to support your efforts. Get your act together before you share your plans with anyone you'd like to have on your team.

Scorpio Interacting with people from all walks of life will allow you to gather interesting data that can help give a unique twist to one of your current projects.

Sagittarius Don't let anyone coerce you into something you know you shouldn't be doing. Focus on home, family and improvements you can make to add comfort to your lifestyle.

Capricorn Surprise everyone with your creativity at work and home, but also be sure to remain grounded in practicality. Someone who has qualities that balance your life will show interest.

Aquarius With a little discipline and a whole lot of hands-on work, you will accomplish your goals and make a significant difference to people influenced by the changes you make.

Pisces You'll instinctively know what others want and what's expected of you. Reuniting with an old colleague who shares a goal with you will be prosperous. EUGENIA LAST
